
International Treaty Making

Guidance for government agencies on practice and procedures for concluding international treaties and arrangements

August 2018

ISBN: 978-0-477-10258-2

CONTENTS

CONTENTS.....	2
I INTRODUCTION.....	3
An Important Distinction: International Treaties and Arrangements	3
Contact details for the Legal Adviser for International Treaties	3
II TREATIES	4
Terminology.....	4
Overview of the Treaty-making Process.....	4
Legal Effect.....	5
Application to Tokelau, the Cook Islands and Niue	6
Signing Treaties	6
Registering Treaties	7
Amending Treaties.....	7
The Process for Taking Treaty Actions	7
An Overview of the Treaty Making Process in New Zealand	9
III NATIONAL INTEREST ANALYSIS	15
What is a National Interest Analysis?	15
Applying the RIA requirements to Cabinet papers on international treaty negotiations and binding treaty actions	15
Cabinet papers seeking to take a binding treaty action	16
Cabinet papers for ongoing treaty negotiations: a two-track process.....	16
National Interest Analysis Drafting Instructions	21
IV ARRANGEMENTS.....	31
Arrangement vs. Memorandum of Understanding	32
Express Provisions as to the Status.....	32
Terminology to be used in Arrangements.....	32
Approval to sign	33
V TREATY CONSULTATION.....	35
MFAT Strategy for Engagement with Māori on International Treaties	35
Consultation with Tokelau, the Cook Islands and Niue	37
Tokelau	37
The Cook Islands and Niue.....	37
VI INFORMATION SOURCES FOR INTERNATIONAL TREATIES	39
New Zealand Treaties Online.....	39
MFAT website.....	39
Other relevant websites.....	39
United Nations	39
Australian Treaty Library:	39
UK Foreign and Commonwealth Office Treaty Section:	40
International Treaty Law	40
VII GLOSSARY.....	41
VIII ANNEXES	48
Annex A: Timeline for concluding and implementing a treaty.....	48
Annex B: Cabinet Manual 2017 excerpts.....	51
Annex C: Standing Orders 397-400 of the House of Representatives.....	54

I INTRODUCTION

International instruments, treaties or arrangements of less-than-treaty-status, have distinct procedural, legal and constitutional requirements. This booklet has been prepared by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade ("MFAT") in the interests of improving Government agencies' understanding of New Zealand's practice with respect to international treaties and arrangements.

While this booklet is a useful guide, any proposal to enter into an international treaty or arrangement must be discussed with the Legal Adviser for International Treaties in the Legal Division of MFAT, as required by the Cabinet Office's CabGuide.

An Important Distinction: International Treaties and Arrangements

There is an important legal distinction between the two types of instruments that the New Zealand Government may conclude with other countries and international organisations:

- Treaties: international instruments that are legally binding under international law;
- Arrangements: international instruments of less-than-treaty-status (i.e. they are not intended to be legally binding but can still create important political commitments).

This distinction has significant practical implications for staff involved in the negotiation and implementation of international instruments.

Both treaties and arrangements are international legal documents. Proposals to enter into international treaties and arrangements require consultation with the Legal Division of MFAT at an early stage. While arrangements are not legally binding, they nevertheless require careful drafting. New Zealand takes its commitments under international arrangements seriously.

Contact details for the Legal Adviser for International Treaties

The Legal Adviser for International Treaties in MFAT is available to answer any questions relating to the material in this booklet, the domestic treaty making process, specific treaty actions and entering into arrangements. The Legal Adviser for International Treaties can be contacted at treaties@mfat.govt.nz.

II TREATIES

Terminology

New Zealand is currently party to approximately 1900 international treaties. As many treaties are only in force for a limited period of time, New Zealand has been party to almost twice that number. At any one time New Zealand is involved in a number of bilateral and multilateral negotiations involving the conclusion of new treaties or amendments to existing treaties.

A treaty is an international agreement between two or more states or other international entities (including, for example, bodies such as the United Nations, the World Bank, or the World Trade Organisation) and is governed by international law. The term "treaty" is used here as a generic term to describe a broad class of instruments recognised as being international agreements. Treaties have a variety of forms and names:

- "Treaty", although binding international agreements are known generically as treaties, the term "treaty" is generally confined to major agreements of political importance (for instance, treaties of alliance or treaties of friendship).
 - "Agreement" is the most common term, especially for bilateral agreements.
 - "Exchanges of Notes (or Letters) Constituting an Agreement" make up a large proportion of the previous category. There are two documents rather than just one. The second document responds to and accepts the agreement proposed in the first.
 - "Convention" is commonly used for multilateral agreements.
- "Protocol" is generally used for agreements that supplement a principal treaty. A Protocol might be drawn up at the same time as the principal treaty or later.

Overview of the Treaty-making Process

A general overview of the process, for multilateral treaties and major bilateral treaties of particular significance, is explained below.

1. Negotiation: New Zealand officials participate in international negotiations resulting in the text of an agreement being finalised.

2. National Interest Analysis: the lead government agency prepares a Cabinet paper and a National Interest Analysis (NIA), which sets out the advantages and disadvantages for New Zealand of becoming a party to the agreement or deciding to withdraw.
3. Signing: Cabinet approves the final text of the agreement, giving authority to sign the agreement; the presentation of the agreement and NIA to the House of Representatives; and the necessary measures for entry into force (i.e. ratification/acceptance/accession). (Cabinet Manual 2017, paragraph 5.79). At this stage, the treaty is agreed but not yet legally binding.
4. Presentation: MFAT presents the treaty and its corresponding NIA to the House of Representatives.
5. Consideration: a select committee considers the treaty and the NIA. The committee has 15 sitting days in which to report back to the House. If it has recommendations to Government, a Government response to these must be tabled within 60 days of the report.
6. Debate: if the Government intends for the treaty to be implemented through a bill the select committee's report is set down for debate as a Government order of the day (Standing Orders 67(d) and 250(2)(a)). The report is then debated in lieu of a debate during the first reading of the bill that implements the treaty. If the Government does not intend for the treaty to be implemented through a bill the select committee's report is set down as a Members' orders of the day and will only be debated if the Business Committee selects it under Standing Order 250(5).
7. Ratification: formal documents are exchanged with the other countries or organisations involved, to bring the treaty into force for New Zealand. These documents confirm domestic procedures have been completed and that the treaty is now in force.

Legal Effect

Treaties (in the generic sense), like statutes, are a form of law-making by New Zealand. They embody solemn international commitments and are binding at international law on parties to them. Like domestic law, treaties are a significant source of legal obligation for the New Zealand Government. The obligations in treaties need to be incorporated into New Zealand domestic law.

It is a fundamental constitutional principle that the Executive cannot change New Zealand's domestic law by becoming party to a treaty. If the obligations being assumed under the treaty cannot be performed under existing law, legislation will be required. As the Law Commission noted in Report 34:¹

¹ "A New Zealand Guide to International Law and its Sources" NZLC R34.

[T]he reason lies in the concept of the separation of powers: if the treaty affects rights and duties under national law, then the treaty becomes the concern of the legislature and not merely of the executive (which will have negotiated the treaty).

Where legislation is required to enable New Zealand to fulfil treaty obligations, the Government's invariable practice is to pass the implementing measure prior to ratifying or acceding to the treaty. This is to ensure that New Zealand is not in breach of its treaty obligations when the treaty becomes binding on New Zealand.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs has the responsibility, on the basis of legal advice from MFAT, to inform Cabinet of the international legal implications of all treaty actions.

Application to Tokelau, the Cook Islands and Niue

New Zealand's special constitutional links with Tokelau, the Cook Islands and Niue mean that questions sometimes arise as to the application of treaties to these countries. Depending on the nature of the treaty action, consultation with the governments of these countries may be required. When considering taking a treaty action, the application of the action to Tokelau, the Cook Islands or Niue should be discussed at an early stage with the Legal Division of MFAT (for more information on the application of treaties to Tokelau, the Cook Islands and Niue see page 36 of this booklet).

Signing Treaties

At international law only the Head of State (the Governor-General), the Head of Government (the Prime Minister), and the Minister of Foreign Affairs have the full powers (authority) to sign international treaties. However, as is often the case, other Ministers or diplomatic representatives can sign treaties if the full powers are delegated to them by an Instrument of Full Powers. The Instrument is prepared beforehand by the Legal Adviser for International Treaties and is signed by the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

It is also important to ask the other party/parties for such an Instrument if their representative is not the Head of State, Head of Government or the Minister of Foreign Affairs. It should always be determined whether the country in question will need an Instrument to be provided.

Full powers are not required for signing arrangements of less-than-treaty-status. See page 32 of this guide for more details.

The Legal Division of the MFAT assists with the processes leading up to the signing of treaties, including printing and binding the signing copy of the treaty and providing an Instrument of Full Powers from the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Registering Treaties

The Legal Division of MFAT is responsible for registering all international treaties that New Zealand enters into with the United Nations Secretariat. This obligation arises under Article 102 of the United Nations Charter:

Article 102

1. Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by a member of the United Nations after the present charter comes into force shall as soon as possible be registered with the Secretariat and published by it.
2. No party to any such treaty or international agreement which has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this article, may invoke that treaty or agreement before any organ of the United Nations.

It is therefore imperative that the original treaty documents are held by the Legal Division of MFAT.

Note: arrangements are not registered with the United Nations. However, the Legal Division of MFAT keeps an archive and registry of all arrangements entered into by New Zealand (including by government agencies).

Amending Treaties

Treaties often prescribe specific rules governing the amendment of the treaty, which must be followed. Commonly, parties will amend a treaty by agreement. Any amendments should be treated as a new treaty action in and of itself and the New Zealand Government must follow the same constitutional and procedural requirements outlined in this Guide for the conclusion of a treaty. The Legal Adviser for International Treaties should be consulted on this process.

The Process for Taking Treaty Actions

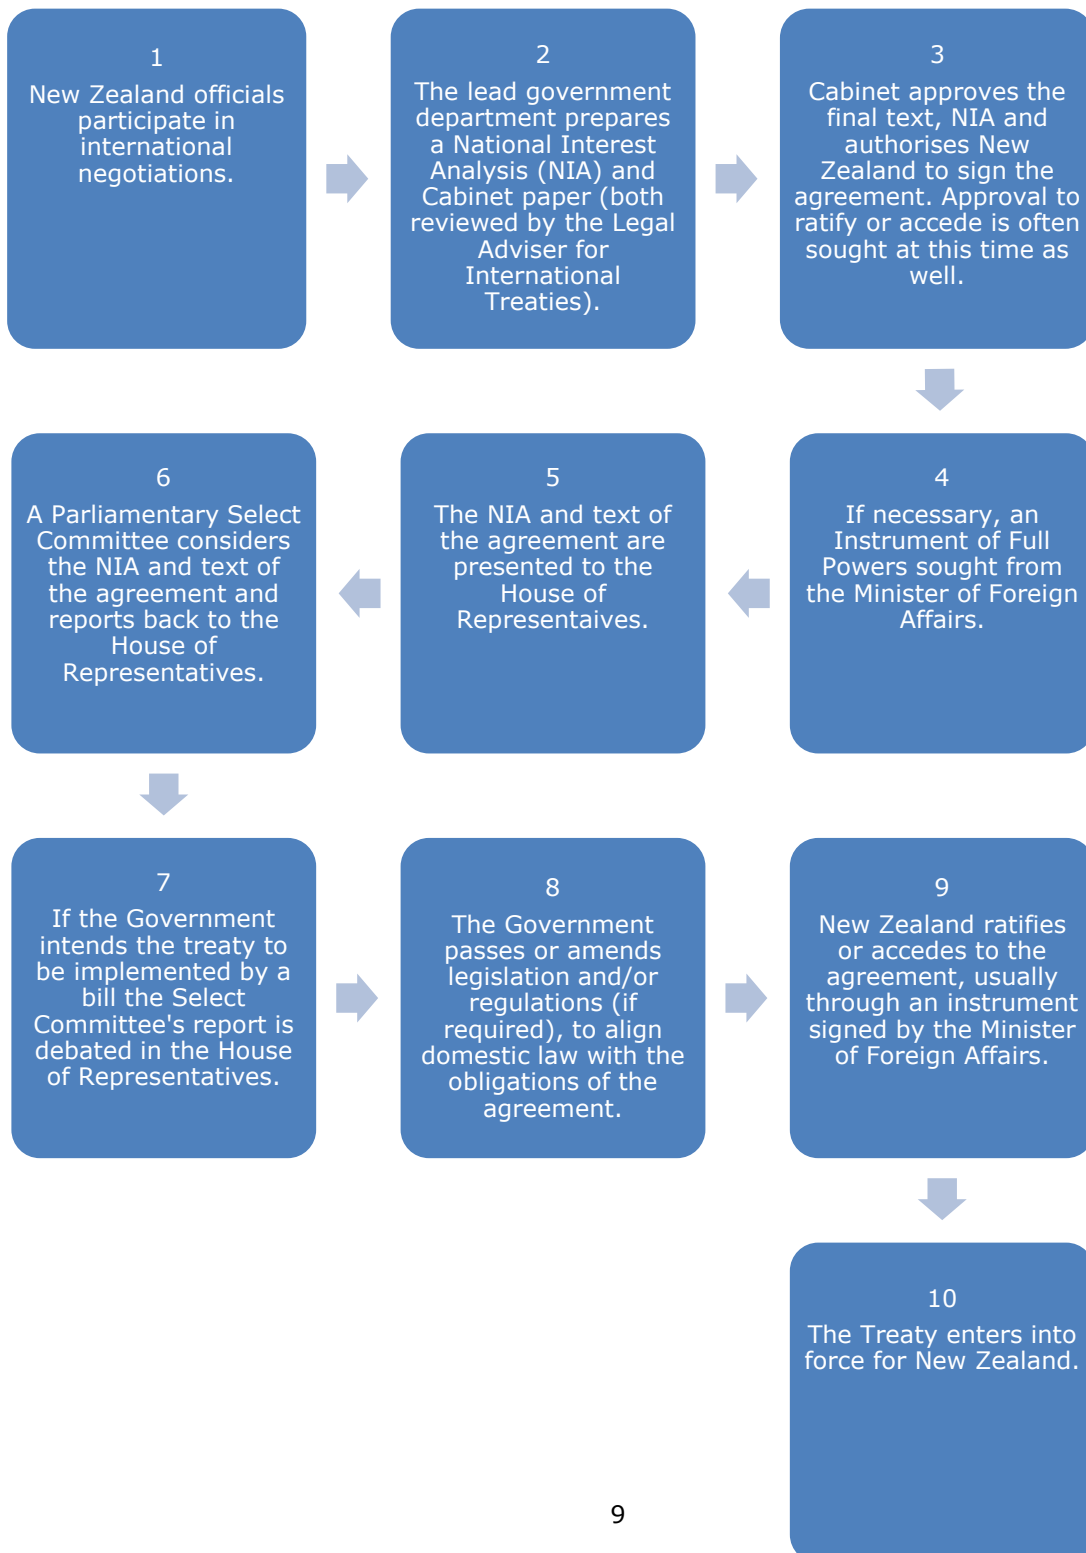

When considering taking a treaty action (such as signature, ratification, accession, acceptance, definitive signature, consent to be bound, withdrawal or termination) the process and timeframe should be carefully considered at the outset. Annex A (page 47) contains a model timeline that should be filled out by the lead department when first considering the treaty action.

Given the varied nature of treaties, timelines will vary widely. It is important to be aware that most treaty actions take a considerable time to conclude. This needs to be factored into your work plan. The Legal Adviser for International Treaties can assist you in formulating a timeline.

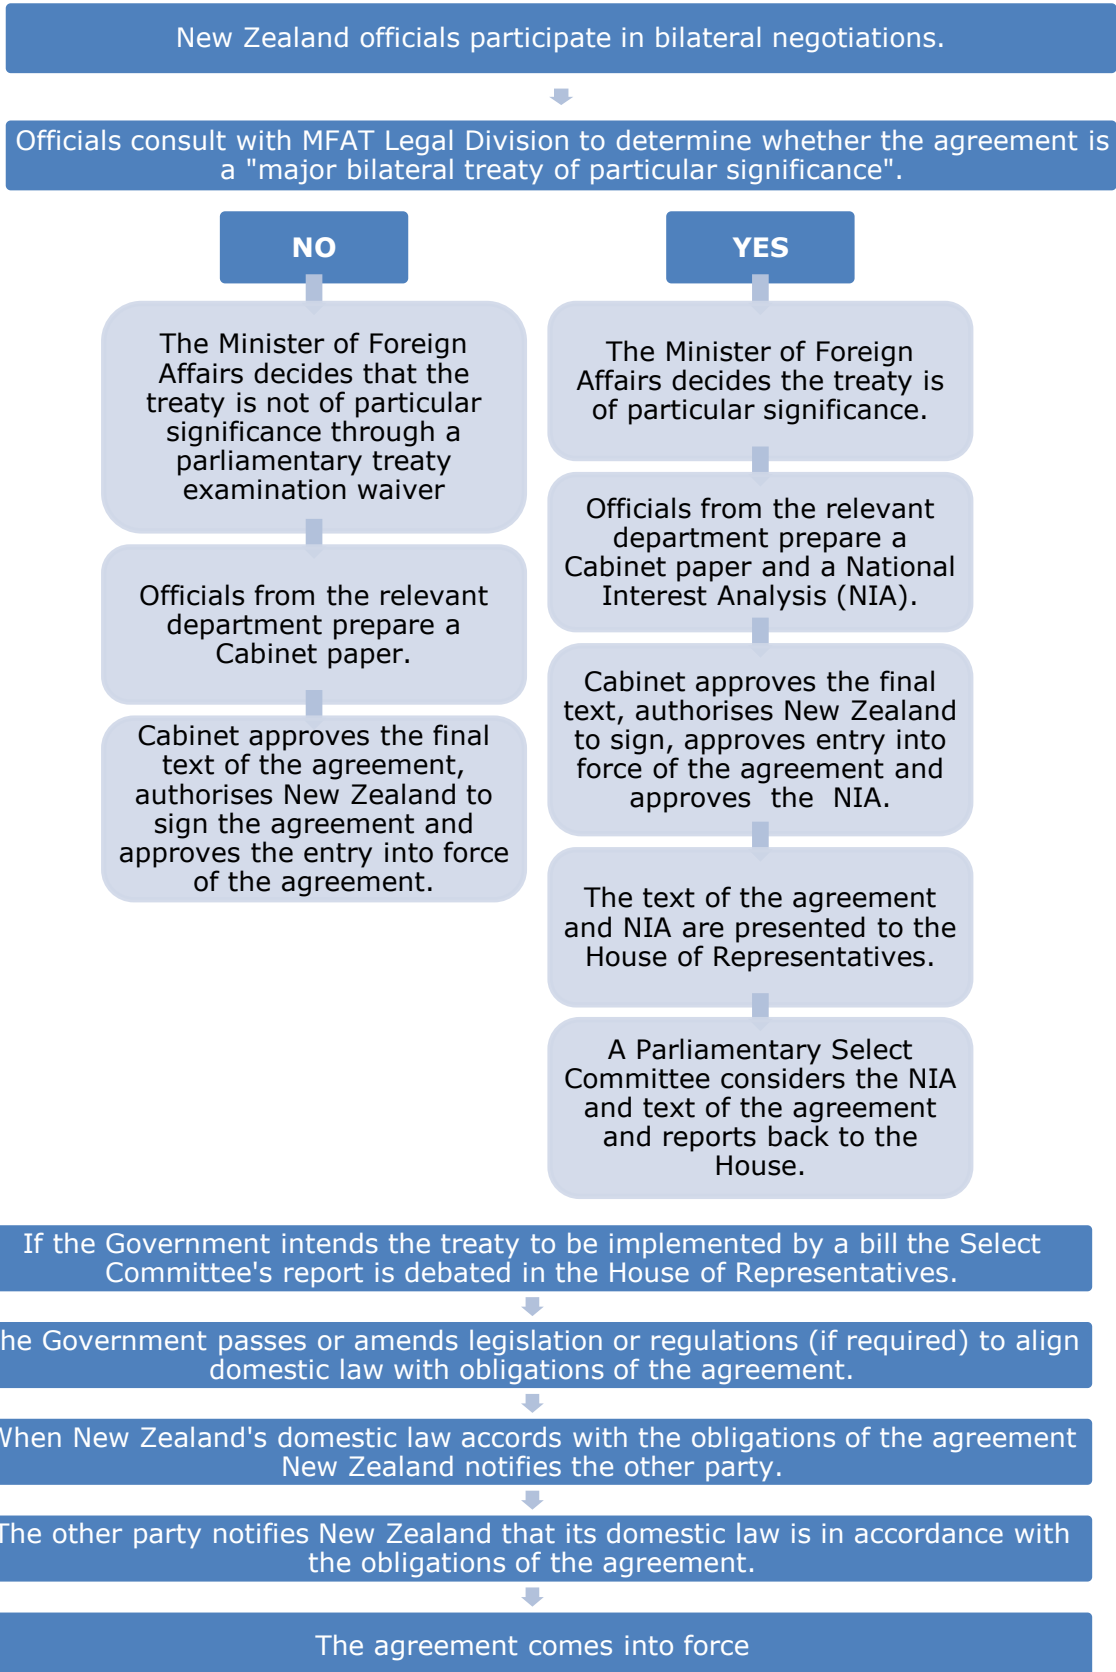

An Overview of the Treaty Making Process in New Zealand

The following is a very basic description of what is often a complicated process. If you would like to know more about the international treaty making process, please visit the MFAT website or contact the Legal Adviser for International Treaties.

Steps to become party to a MULTILATERAL agreement:

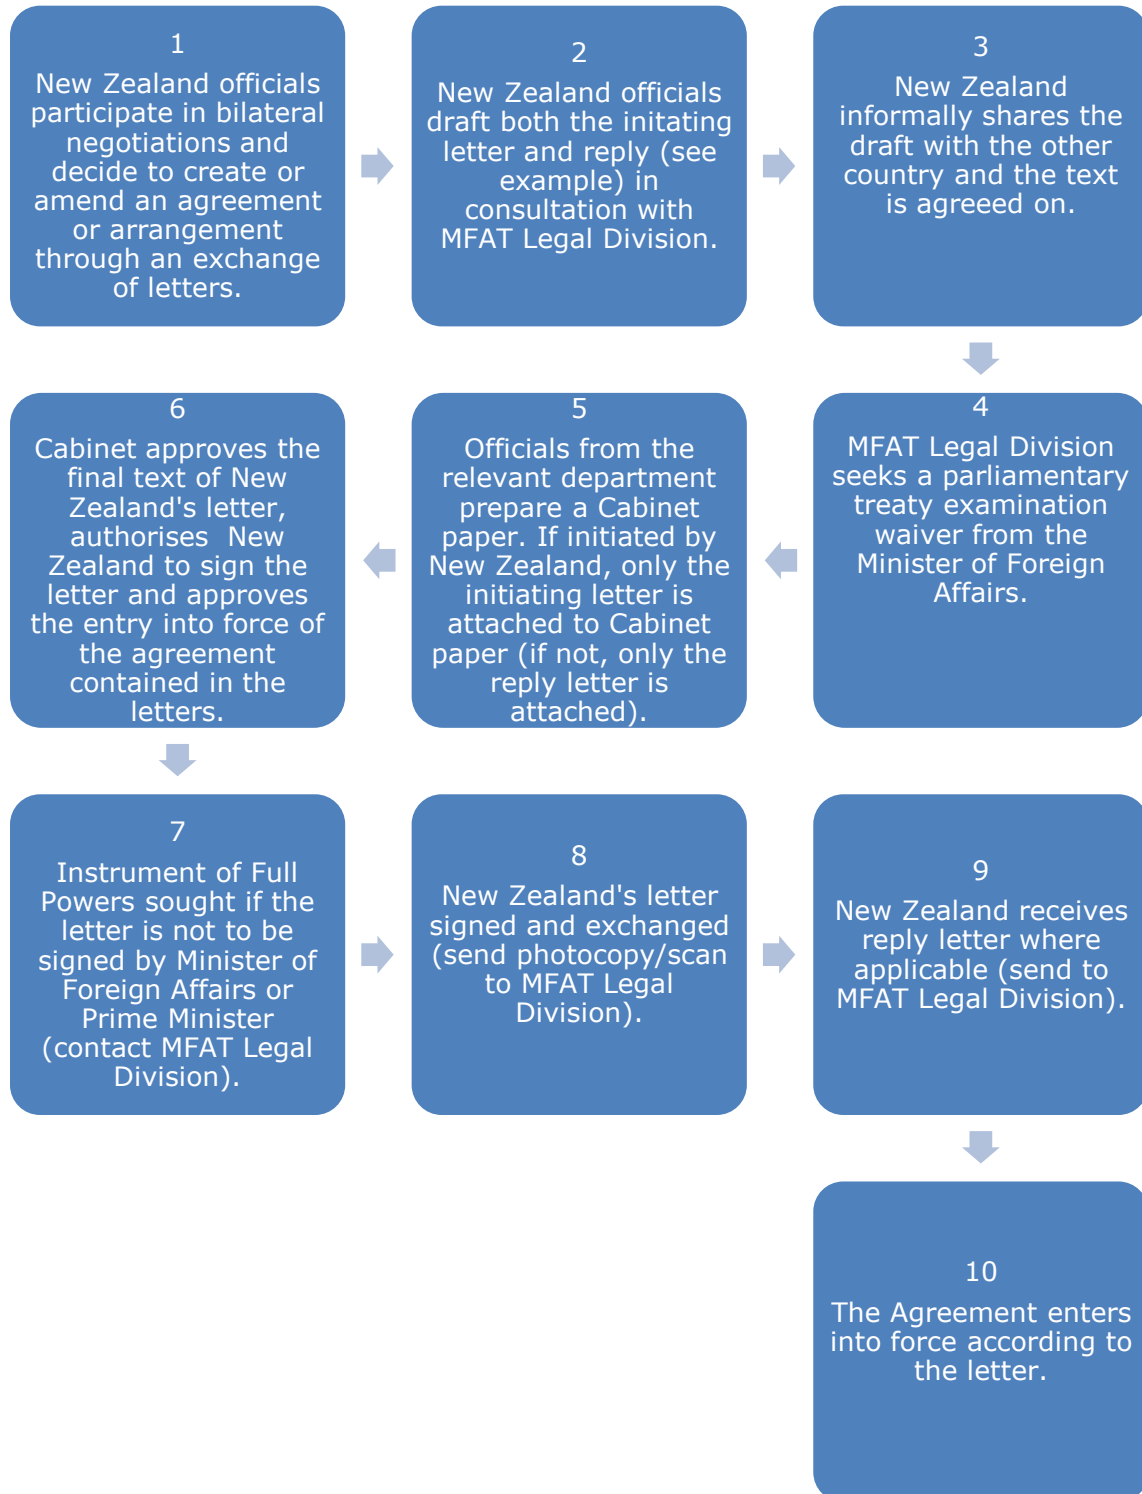

Steps to become party to a BILATERAL agreement:

Process for an Exchange of Letters constituting an agreement:

(where initiated by New Zealand)

[Reply letter]

Your Excellency,

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your Letter dated [] concerning [] which reads as follows:

[Text of the initiating letter set out in full, if necessary in translation]

I have the honour to confirm that the above proposals are acceptable to the Government of [], and that your Letter and this reply shall constitute an agreement between our two Governments on this matter, which will come into force [today].

Bilateral Treaties: Criteria for Parliamentary Examination

The Parliamentary treaty examination process requires all multilateral treaties and all "major bilateral treaties of particular significance" to be presented to the House for examination by a select committee, before binding treaty action is taken (Standing Order 397, Cabinet Manual paragraph 7.124). What might constitute a "major bilateral treaty of particular significance" is a matter for the Minister of Foreign Affairs to determine.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs uses the following criteria to help determine which bilateral treaties are "major bilateral treaties of particular significance":

- the subject matter of the treaty is likely to be of major interest to the public;
- the treaty deals with an important subject upon which there is no ready precedent (i.e. it is an original treaty dealing with a one-off situation);
- the treaty deals with an important subject and departs substantively from previous models relating to the same subject;
- the treaty represents a major development in the bilateral relationship;
- the treaty has significant financial implications for the government;
- the treaty cannot be terminated, or remains in force for a specified period, thus binding future governments permanently or for a specified time;
- the treaty is to be implemented by way of overriding treaty regulations (i.e. regulations that implement a treaty by way of regulations that override primary legislation);
- the treaty is a major treaty that New Zealand seeks to terminate; and
- the Foreign Affairs, Defence and Trade Committee indicates its interest in examining the treaty.

Note: These criteria are intended to help the Minister exercise discretion. They do not replace that discretion.

Consultation with the Legal Adviser for International Treaties at an early stage is essential whenever officials are contemplating bilateral treaty action that may be subject to the procedure for presenting a treaty to the House of Representatives. The Legal Division can provide guidance on the above criteria, the presentation process, and the required format and content of the National Interest Analysis (see also Section III in this Guide). The Legal Adviser for International Treaties in the Legal Division is the main point of contact on these issues (treaties@mfat.govt.nz).

III NATIONAL INTEREST ANALYSIS

What is a National Interest Analysis?

A National Interest Analysis (“NIA”) is a summary of why a treaty action (i.e. becoming party to, amending or withdrawing from a treaty.) is in the national interest. NIAs are the key working document used by Parliamentary Select Committees to scrutinise New Zealand treaty actions.

In accordance with Standing Order 397, a NIA must be prepared and presented in the House of Representatives for all multilateral treaties and bilateral treaties of particular significance. The Cabinet Manual requires the NIA to be presented to Cabinet before presentation to the House.

Once presented in the House, NIAs are valuable public reference documents, and are available publicly on Parliament’s website. It is important that drafters of NIAs have a good understanding of the treaty text, the proposed treaty action, and its implications for New Zealand. This understanding must be communicated as clearly as possible in the NIA. It is very important to avoid legal terms and jargon.

Every NIA must be reviewed and cleared by the Legal Adviser for International Treaties at MFAT before it is submitted to Cabinet for approval for compliance with the Standing Orders. Two weeks must be allowed for this. Drafters of NIAs are also encouraged to contact the Legal Adviser for International Treaties with any queries in the drafting process.

Examples of NIAs can be found on the Parliamentary website (enter “treaty examination” in the keyword search to bring up a list of all Committee reports on New Zealand treaty actions, which annex the relevant NIA).

Applying the RIA requirements to Cabinet papers on international treaty negotiations and binding treaty actions

A Regulatory Impact Analysis (“RIA”) is required for all policy work leading to the submission of a Cabinet paper that might require changes to legislation or regulations. If a RIA is required, the mandatory RIA processes can be found on Treasury’s website, Cabinet requires the completion of a regulatory impact statement (“RIS”) to accompany all Cabinet papers.

In the case of international treaties (including treaty negotiations), RIA may be required for papers seeking Cabinet approval to enter into negotiations, to renew or update a negotiating mandate, to sign the final text of a treaty, or for a treaty to enter into force for New Zealand.

Cabinet papers seeking to take a binding treaty action

When Cabinet approval is sought for New Zealand to take a binding treaty action that will have regulatory implications for New Zealand, a RIA must be carried out.³

All multilateral treaties and “major bilateral treaties of particular significance” are required to undergo the parliamentary treaty examination process. This requires presentation of a NIA in the House of Representatives. Where these treaties have regulatory implications, an extended NIA will be prepared that includes the required RIA. An extended NIA includes the information set out in section 6(B) to (E) and the Adequacy Statement in part 12 of the NIA drafting instructions (see below). The extended NIA must comply with all the requirements of a RIA.

Bilateral treaties that are not “major bilateral treaties of particular significance” do not need to undergo the parliamentary treaty examination process. Where there are regulatory implications for these treaties, the required RIA will usually be included as part of the Cabinet paper seeking the binding treaty action.

If taking a binding treaty action has no regulatory impacts (i.e. it will not require any changes to legislation or regulations), the RIA requirements will not apply.

Cabinet papers for ongoing treaty negotiations: a two-track process

Treaty negotiations require Cabinet decisions prior to the binding treaty action stage in order to establish, and sometimes update, the negotiating mandate. Because RIA requirements were designed primarily for domestic policy making processes, they do not fit naturally with the policy process for negotiating international treaties. Therefore a two-track approach was developed to give effect to RIA requirements for Cabinet papers on treaty negotiations.

Where proposals in a treaty negotiation will have regulatory impacts either Track I or Track II will apply:

The basic principle to follow is that RIA decisions should be taken based on the significance of the Cabinet decisions being sought.

Track I Treaties

Cabinet papers seeking decisions on treaty negotiations, regardless of whether they are for bilateral or multilateral treaties, will only fall into Track I if they satisfy the test set out below:

³ Examples of binding treaty actions include binding signature, ratification, amendment, accession, and withdrawal.

- the treaty negotiations will not have significant or wide-reaching regulatory implications for New Zealand (e.g. a multilateral treaty negotiation to establish a new international agency may require only minor amendments to the Diplomatic Privileges and Immunities Act); or
- regulatory implications arising from the treaty negotiations are consistent with established policy (for example, amending a tariff schedule to implement a regular Free Trade Agreement).

The second category covers all Cabinet papers for treaty negotiations with direct regulatory implications that stem from established policy settings. For example, Working Holiday Schemes, Double Tax Agreements, Film Co-production agreements and some Free Trade Agreements all require changes to legislation or regulations but such changes stem from pre-established policy choices.

For example, in a bilateral film co-production treaty negotiation, the policy choices (to promote cultural exchanges; to permit the duty-free entry of equipment or the movement of personnel associated with an official co-production; and other such benefits) are already well established and uncontroversial. This is also the case for Free Trade Agreements negotiated within the bounds of existing domestic policy, where the principal adjustments to the New Zealand regulatory environment are a change to tariff settings or customs excise rules.

For these Track I treaty negotiations, a RIA (most often in the form of a Regulatory Impact Statement, "RIS") is not required until the final Cabinet paper seeking authority to take binding treaty action.

A standard Cabinet paper paragraph for a Track I treaty negotiation might read as follows:

For multilateral treaties and major bilateral treaties of particular significance

"An extended National Interest Analysis (incorporating a Regulatory Impact Analysis) will be presented to Cabinet when negotiations have concluded and approval is sought to become party to [name of treaty]. In the interim, if and when decisions from Ministers are sought that require consideration of legislative or regulatory options for implementation, assessments of regulatory impact will be provided. Depending on the progress of negotiations, this may occur as more specific negotiating mandates are sought."

For bilateral treaties that are not major bilateral treaties of particular significance

"A Cabinet paper incorporating Regulatory Impact Analysis will be presented to Cabinet when negotiations have concluded and approval is sought to become party to [name of treaty]. In the interim, if and when decisions from Ministers are sought that require consideration of legislative or regulatory options for implementation, assessments of regulatory impact will be provided. Depending on the progress of negotiations, this may occur as more specific negotiating mandates are sought.”

Most treaty negotiations will fall into Track I. If it is not clear, a judgment will be made following discussion between the agency, MFAT Legal Division and the Treasury policy team.

Track II Treaties

Track II applies to treaty negotiations that do not fall within Track I.

For Track II treaty negotiations, a RIA is required to accompany any Cabinet paper that seeks material decisions regarding New Zealand’s negotiating position and:

- the outcome of negotiations may have significant or wide-reaching regulatory implications for New Zealand; or
- the regulatory implications arise from changes to existing policy.

The RIA should be commensurate with the potential nature and magnitude of the regulatory impacts. However, it is recognised that the RIA will be subject to constraints at the early stages of negotiation, such as uncertainty and lack of information. The RIA can be presented as a RIS, within the body of the relevant Cabinet paper, or in annexes.

As set out in the RIA Handbook, the Treasury RIA Team (“RIAT”) may undertake the Quality Assurance of the RIS.⁴ RIAT is only involved with proposals that are likely to have a significant impact or risk.⁵ Treaties on Track II may well meet the significance criteria, and warrant RIAT involvement. Track I treaties are unlikely to meet the criteria for RIAT involvement.

⁴ For proposals that meet “significance criteria”, RIAT is required to provide the Quality Assurance of the RIS, or in this case the RIS elements that are incorporated into the extended NIA at the end of the negotiation process. In making this assessment, RIAT will focus on the implications and impacts of the regulatory aspects of the Treaty. However, they will also consider the wider context within which trade-offs regarding regulatory impacts are being made.

⁵ A regulatory initiative is considered to trigger the significance criteria if any of the options being considered are likely to have significant direct impacts or flow-on effects on New Zealand society, the economy, or the environment; or significant policy risks, implementation risks or uncertainty. Refer:
<http://cabguide.cabinetoffice.govt.nz/procedures/regulatory-impact-analysis>.

Interim Regulatory Impact Analysis

For all Track II treaty negotiations, an interim RIA should be prepared. To the extent possible, the RIA should focus on:

- the regulatory implications of the positions taken in the negotiating mandate (for instance, identifying areas of legislation and regulation that may be affected by the mandate positions, and if known, whether primary, secondary or tertiary changes may be needed);⁶
- the types of issues that will need to be worked through (for instance, briefly outlining regulatory barriers to compliance); and
- highlighting any risks these may pose.

A standard Cabinet paper paragraph for a Track II treaty negotiation might read as follows:

“The RIA requirements apply as this paper seeks decisions from Ministers that set the parameters of New Zealand’s negotiating position in negotiations of a treaty which may have regulatory implications for New Zealand. As the negotiations are still in the early stages, there were some constraints and uncertainties in the analysis. Therefore an interim regulatory impact assessment has been provided in this paper.

[Identify paragraphs containing RIA in the Cabinet paper, for example relating to particular legislation that may be affected and the current state of that legislation.]

If and when further decisions are sought from Ministers that require consideration of legislative or regulatory options for implementation, assessments of regulatory impact will be provided. Depending on the progress of negotiations, this may occur as more specific negotiating mandates are sought. An extended National Interest Analysis (incorporating a full Regulatory Impact Analysis) will be presented to Cabinet if the Government proposes to sign and ratify the [treaty] after negotiations have concluded.”

⁶ An example from a Cabinet paper relating to negotiations for a new legally binding instrument on Mercury is:

This paper has no immediate legislative implications. If a mercury treaty is agreed, there are potentially implications for the Resource Management Act 1991, Hazardous Substances and New Organisms Act 1996, the Imports and Exports (Restrictions) Prohibition Order (No 2) 2004, Waste Minimisation Act 2008 and possibly other legislation if New Zealand chose to ratify the mercury treaty.

PIRA – Preliminary Impact and Risk Assessment

The purpose of completing a PIRA is to determine at the outset whether the RIA requirements apply and whether RIAT involvement is required. Because the generic PIRA template does not reflect the treaty process, MFAT Legal Division may advise that a PIRA is not required prior to commencing a particular treaty negotiation. If this is the case you must, however, discuss your treaty process with the Treasury, MFAT and RIAT and agree how the RIA requirements will apply to the treaty process.

Changing from Track I to Track II

For some treaty negotiations it may be clear from the outset that it does not belong in Track I. Other treaty negotiations that start on Track I may require Cabinet decisions updating the negotiating mandate as negotiations progress. At this point, if it becomes clear that the decisions have substantive regulatory implications, the treaty negotiation will move to Track II (e.g., if in the course of negotiations it becomes clear that a Free Trade Agreement will have regulatory implications beyond established policy settings, Cabinet papers seeking decisions on this will be Track II).

An extra note on multilateral treaties

Multilateral treaty negotiations are unique because:

- New Zealand may have little control or influence over the development of policy decisions in the negotiations, including those that will impact on New Zealand's regulatory framework. Therefore, the final outcome of a multilateral treaty may not be informed by New Zealand's particular regulatory framework;
- Participating in negotiations does not necessarily mean that New Zealand will ratify the resulting treaty (i.e. the treaty will have no regulatory impact for New Zealand in practice); and New Zealand may wish to become Party to multilateral treaties without having ever participated in the negotiations. This means that New Zealand can only accurately consider the full regulatory impact of such a treaty after the negotiations have concluded and at the point that New Zealand is considering taking a binding treaty action; this will be covered as part of an extended National Interest Analysis.

For Cabinet papers seeking or updating a multilateral negotiating mandate, the above factors pose challenges to undertaking a full RIA, and limit both the scope of the analysis and the certainty with which impacts can be assessed. When a multilateral treaty falls under Track II, a RIA is required even if it is not possible to prepare a comprehensive one.

Step-by-step guide

At the outset of commencing treaty negotiations, consider whether a PIRA would assist in the determination of whether RIA will apply.

Step 1: Will the proposal require potential changes to legislation or regulations?
If yes, or if it is unclear at this stage, RIA may apply. Go to Step 2.		If no, RIA does not apply at all.
Step 2: Does the proposal relate to a binding treaty action with regulatory impact (signature, amendment, accession or ratification) or a treaty negotiation?
If for a binding treaty action, RIA is required (either as part of an Extended NIA or as part of a Cabinet paper as appropriate).		If for a treaty negotiation, go to Step 3.
Step 3: Determine whether the proposal is Track I or Track II
(a) Will the proposals in the paper have significant or wide reaching regulatory implications for New Zealand?		(b) Would the implementation of the proposals in the paper require changes to existing policy?
If yes or unclear, go to (b).	If no, this is a Track I Treaty. RIA is not required until the binding treaty action stage.	If yes or unclear, this is a Track II Treaty. The elements of a full or partial RIS may need to accompany key Cabinet papers seeking mandates, as well as at the binding treaty action stage.	If no, this is a Track I Treaty. RIA is not required until the binding treaty action stage.
Please consult with the Legal Adviser for International Treaties at MFAT and Treasury's Policy Team to determine whether any particular treaty is Track I or Track II.

National Interest Analysis Drafting Instructions

These drafting instructions set out the 11 mandatory NIA section headings which are required by Standing Order 398. Under each heading is a general description of what is required in each section. Bullet points then list the specific requirements that must be incorporated under each heading.

This document should be read in conjunction with the relevant sections of the Cabinet Manual and the Cabinet Office's CabGuide (the Cab Guide can be accessed at: <https://www.dpmc.govt.nz/publications/about-international-treaty-making>)

These headings must be used in the NIA:

- 1 Executive summary
- 2 Nature and timing of the proposed treaty action
- 3 Reasons for New Zealand becoming Party to the treaty
- 4 Advantages and disadvantages to New Zealand of the treaty entering into force and not entering into force for New Zealand
- 5 Legal obligations which would be imposed on New Zealand by the treaty action, the position in respect of reservations to the treaty, and an outline of any dispute settlement mechanisms
- 6 Measures which the Government could or should adopt to implement the treaty action, including specific reference to implementing legislation
- 7 Economic, social, cultural and environmental costs and effects of the treaty action
- 8 The costs to New Zealand of compliance with the treaty
- 9 Completed or proposed consultation with the community and parties interested in the treaty action
- 10 Subsequent protocols and/or amendments to the treaty and their likely effects
- 11 Withdrawal or denunciation provision in the treaty
- 12 Agency Disclosure Statement (only required if the proposal has legislative or regulatory implications)

1. Executive summary

This section should provide a brief (maximum one page), high-level contextual statement about the proposed treaty action. It should include the purpose of the proposed action and a summary of why it is in the national interest.⁷

⁷ Note that the purposes of the Executive Summary in a NIA and a treaty action Cabinet paper are different. The Executive Summary in a Cabinet paper can be much shorter than in a NIA.

2. Nature and timing of the proposed treaty action

This section should provide a general introduction to the treaty and the treaty action. It must include:

- The full title of the treaty (it may be a Convention, Protocol, Agreement, Exchange of Letters), including the common or abbreviated name where relevant and a common term that will be used to refer to the treaty throughout the NIA (e.g. the "Agreement"). It is important to ensure the treaty is consistently differentiated from other treaties that may be discussed in the NIA. Also include when the treaty was concluded and give dates of signature/exchange of notes if this has already occurred. For a multilateral treaty action, state whether it is in force generally (i.e. for others) and when it is likely to enter into force for New Zealand and/or generally. Do not annex the treaty text (it will be presented to the House along with the NIA).
- The nature of binding treaty action. Refer to relevant articles of the treaty to explain what treaty action is proposed (e.g. ratification, accession, acceptance, definitive signature, consent to be bound, entry into force through an exchange of notes or letters, withdrawal, termination, denunciation etc.). If the treaty action is related to an existing treaty, the NIA should clearly establish that relationship. If the treaty action terminates, replaces, revises, amends, or is a Protocol to, an existing treaty this should be explained. Any territorial limits or interim application of treaty provisions should also be included. In the case of multilateral treaties, include any reservations or declarations.
- The date by which the Government proposes to complete binding treaty action (e.g. before .../ after .../ as soon as practicable after...), and when it will enter into force for New Zealand.
- Application to Tokelau, the Cook Islands and Niue, note whether consultation with Tokelau, the Cook Islands or Niue is required. If it is, note whether this has been conducted and whether, as a result, the treaty action will apply to Tokelau, the Cook Islands or Niue.

3. Reasons for New Zealand becoming Party to the treaty

This section should provide a broad overview of the reasons for New Zealand to take the proposed treaty action. It should justify the decision to take the treaty action and may refer to material in other sections of the NIA. This section must include the following:

- The key background to the treaty.
- A brief, high-level summary of key features of the current situation, including, if applicable, a summary of the nature and magnitude of the problem that the treaty action seeks to address (the root cause of the problem should be identified, not just the symptoms); how the proposed treaty action will address the problem and why the proposed treaty action is the preferred option

(as opposed to New Zealand not taking the treaty action, or taking an alternative action).

- Key reasons why New Zealand should take the proposed treaty action.
- The policy objective(s) the government wishes to achieve by taking the treaty action.
- Major and like-minded parties to the treaty (i.e. states that have already signed and/or ratified the treaty).

4. Advantages and disadvantages to New Zealand of the treaty entering into force and not entering into force for New Zealand

This is the key section of the NIA. It should address in detail the advantages of proceeding and the disadvantages of not taking the action. In weighing these pros and cons, canvass the potential economic, political, social, cultural and environmental effects arising from the proposed treaty action. Put it in the context of the domestic policy environment. Reference should be made to how any disadvantages will be managed or overcome, and whether they are a justifiable trade-off in light of the advantages.

If it is a bilateral treaty action, New Zealand's relationship with the proposed treaty partner should be considered. In the case of a multilateral treaty, New Zealand's interests in the international organisation under whose auspices the treaty has been negotiated should be canvassed.

This section must include an outline of the specific advantages and disadvantages to New Zealand in completing and implementing the treaty action (not to Parties to the treaty in general). This section should establish that, in light of the options available to New Zealand, the proposed treaty action is the best policy option and will achieve the Government's policy objective(s) set out in the previous section.

5. Legal obligations which would be imposed on New Zealand by the treaty action, the position in respect of reservations to the treaty, and an outline of any dispute settlement mechanisms

This section should identify all the substantive legal obligations that will be imposed on New Zealand as a result of the proposed treaty action. An obligation is, in essence, something that New Zealand will be required by the treaty to do, or refrain from doing.

This section should refer readers to the specific article, provision or chapter of the treaty, should they wish to read the obligation in its context. In the case of amendments, protocols etc., this may require reference to provisions of the head agreement. Include the obligations owed to New Zealand by other countries under the treaty, and look beyond the text to the negotiation process, and any legal advice received, to understand which of the provisions contain a noteworthy obligation. If legal advice has been sought and relied upon for this section, please attach that advice when you submit the draft NIA to MFAT for comment.

This section must:

- Include a description of substantive obligations in the treaty. This must be in plain English to allow readers to understand the nature and scope of the obligations. The text of a provision containing an obligation should not simply be repeated. It is, however, not necessary to describe all obligations article-by-article. It may be more appropriate to group noteworthy obligations by type (e.g. financial, government, private sector).
- Identify the substantive variations to template text (if applicable). If the treaty action is based on a model-type text or 'template' treaty (e.g. double tax, social security or air services), identify any substantive variations to the template or text.
- Include a reservation statement, specifying whether the treaty allows Parties to make a reservation upon ratification. If so, specify whether New Zealand will use this mechanism in respect of any of the obligations.
- Include a dispute resolution statement, specifying whether the treaty contains a dispute resolution mechanism. If so, include an explanation of the resolution process.
- Include a statement as to any continuing obligations from the head treaty (if applicable). If the treaty action is a withdrawal from, or a denunciation or termination of, an existing treaty, describe the obligations of the head treaty and identify any of those obligations that will remain in effect after the treaty action enters into force.

6 Measures which the Government could or should adopt to implement the treaty action, including specific reference to implementing legislation

New Zealand's approach to all international treaties is that ratification/accession is only considered where there is strict compliance of law, policy and practice with all the provisions of the treaty.

Accordingly, this section should describe succinctly what will be done to implement the obligations that will be imposed on New Zealand by the treaty action (i.e. the obligations identified in the previous section). Implementation options available to the government should be discussed. If relevant, provide detail on the government's preferred implementation option. Under Standing Order 398(2) this section must indicate whether or not the Government intends for the treaty to be implemented by a bill.

A If no new measures are required to implement the obligations resulting from the treaty action, this section must:

- Identify how the obligations in the treaty are met by existing legislation.

B If measures are required, this section must:

- Provide a summary of the range of options available for implementing the treaty action.
- Include a description of why each option is preferred/not preferred, including the benefits and costs (including risks) of alternative options.

C If the measures required have legislative implications, this section must:

- Identify which obligations require legislative implementation.
- Explain how the proposal will be given effect to, including legislative timetables (i.e. if it has been awarded a place in the legislative programme).
- Include plans for notifying affected parties of what they need to do to comply with any new requirements (e.g. gazetting of legislation or any specific legislative process), if applicable.
- Explain how any implementing legislation would impact on existing regulation, including whether the proposal overlaps and interacts with existing rules; whether the proposal makes any existing rules redundant; and whether these rules are being removed or altered as part of the proposal (e.g. does the implementing legislation stand-alone or impact on existing legislation by requiring consequential amendments?).
- Identify the enforcement strategy that must be implemented to ensure that the preferred option achieves the public policy objective and plans for monitoring and evaluating the preferred option, including key dates (e.g. review clauses, meetings of the Parties and/or reporting obligations set out in the treaty), if applicable.

D If the measures required include the making of regulations, this section must:

- Identify the primary legislation allowing for regulations and indicate the timeframe in which regulations are expected to be approved and gazetted.

E If the measures required include implementation by way of an overriding regulation, this section must:

- Refer to this explicitly and provide justification for it (this is a mandatory Cabinet requirement).

7. Economic, social, cultural and environmental costs and effects of the treaty action

This section should provide a balanced assessment of the effects and costs associated with the treaty action. It is not intended to provide an opportunity to advocate for the proposed treaty action. If the treaty is expected to have a large impact on society, officials should ensure that someone with the appropriate expertise carries out a cost-benefit analysis.

This section must:

- Specify the economic, social, cultural and environmental costs and effects of the proposed treaty action.
- Identify the incidence and scope of the effects (i.e. are they short term, transitional or long term?). Note any likely long term environmental effects associated with the treaty action.
- State whether the treaty is expected to have a large impact on the economy (e.g. will it impact on the labour market, international trade, technology, inflation and/or economic growth?)
- Identify any particular groups or sectors likely to be affected directly or indirectly by the treaty action, and the impact of the treaty action.
Note whether the treaty will have a disproportionate effect on a particular ethnic or cultural group in New Zealand society. Identify the social consequences if the treaty has an effect on a particular industry or geographic location.
- Specify whether the treaty action complies with relevant resource management requirements and environmental policy trends.

8. The costs to New Zealand of compliance with the treaty

- Specify the financial costs, risks and benefits to New Zealand of compliance with the treaty action (even if difficult to estimate). This may include, but is not limited to, contributions to international organisations provided for in the treaty action, costs of establishing/administering any new domestic agency as a direct result of taking the treaty action, or any other financial implication for the Government, business or industry. In the case of a protocol or amendment to an existing treaty for example, such costs should also be set in the context of those of the head agreement. When estimating costs identify any major assumptions, potential deficiencies or estimates in the information relied upon. Where quantitative information is not available, qualitative information will be acceptable. Describe how any risks identified will be/are being mitigated.
- Identify the incidence and scope of the costs, risks and benefits (i.e. are the costs, risks and benefits short term, transitional or long term?). Note any likely long term environmental costs or benefits associated with the treaty action.
- Note whether any compliance costs will be imposed or reduced for businesses in New Zealand as a result of compliance with the treaty action. If there are, address sources of compliance costs; the firms affected, by sector and size; estimates of the compliance costs identified (where quantitative data is not available qualitative information will be acceptable), indicating on whom they impact and the impact on different sized firms; and steps taken (if any) to minimise compliance costs.

- Identify any hidden administrative costs on government agencies in the implementation of the treaty (e.g. additional health and safety requirements, data recording or information sharing requirements).

9. Completed or proposed consultation with the community and parties interested in the treaty action

This section should set out in full the consultation process and the results. In relation to consultation, note that:

- It is for the government department leading the proposed treaty action to determine what consultation is required. The manner and degree of consultation will depend on the issues under consideration. Consultation should be commensurate with the impact of the treaty on current policy and existing law. The Minister and department concerned should ensure that adequate consultation has taken place.
- Departments should identify Māori concerns at an early stage and tailor consultation accordingly.
- The Treasury must be consulted on all treaty actions that have financial implications.

This section must identify:

- Who has been consulted (e.g. government departments, iwi, industry, NGOs, academics).
- At what stage they were consulted.
- The nature of consultation.
- Key feedback from those consulted, with particular emphasis on any significant concerns that were raised about the proposed treaty action, how the lead department addressed the concerns, and if they did not alter the proposal, why not. However, do not attribute governmental feedback to specific government departments/ ministries.
- If there was no consultation, the reasons why.

10. Subsequent protocols and/or amendments to the treaty and their likely effects

This section must:

- Describe the amendment procedures set out in the treaty. If the proposed treaty action (such as an amendment or annex) is made under an existing treaty, refer also to the amendment provisions in the existing treaty.
- Identify whether amendments enter into force automatically for the Parties, or whether they require separate approval. Include details of the likely type and frequency of any automatic amendments, and the process and timeframes set out in the treaty.
- Identify whether the treaty action provides for the negotiation of future related legally binding instruments, such as protocols, annexes, rules or standards. If possible, indicate what areas these future instruments are likely to address and the possible effects of this. Describe how such future instruments are to be made binding on the parties (e.g. would approval be automatic/by provision of the treaty/by executive action/require legislative approval?). Explain if such future instruments could expand or contract our obligations under the treaty, whether they would have domestic implications and whether future instruments would be subject to the New Zealand treaty process.

11. Withdrawal or denunciation provision in the treaty

This section should indicate whether the treaty action provides for withdrawal or denunciation and, if so, what procedures apply and under what conditions. Where known, include the reason behind the notice period specified in the treaty (i.e. why is the notice period one year, five years, etc.). If any provisions/obligations continue after withdrawal or denunciation, mention them here.

This section must:

- Identify how New Zealand may withdraw from or denounce its obligations under the treaty.
- Identify any provisions/obligations that continue after withdrawal or denunciation and the period for which they will apply to New Zealand.
- If there is no express withdrawal or denunciation provision, indicate that withdrawal is possible only with the consent of all/both the parties (Article 54, Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties).
- If the proposed treaty action (such as an amendment or annex) is made under an existing treaty, set out any withdrawal or denunciation provisions in the treaty.

12. Agency Disclosure Statement

This section should only be included if the proposed treaty action involves any legislative or regulatory proposals.

This section should describe the nature and extent of the analysis undertaken, including any significant constraints, caveats or uncertainties; and whether or not any of the policy options are likely to have effects that the government has identified as requiring a particularly strong case before regulation is considered.

The template Agency Disclosure Statement is as follows:

“AGENCY DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

[A paragraph describing the nature and extent of the analysis undertaken, explicitly noting:

- Key gaps, key assumptions, key dependencies, and any significant constraints, caveats or uncertainties concerning the analysis; and
- Any further work required before any policy decisions could be implemented.]

[A paragraph identifying whether or not any of the policy options are likely to have effects that the government has said will require a particularly strong case before regulation is considered - namely it could:

- impose additional costs on businesses during the current economic recession;
- impair private property rights, market competition, or the incentives on businesses to innovate and invest; or
- override fundamental common law principles (as referenced in Chapter 3 of the Legislation Advisory Committee Guidelines)

[Name and designation of person signing on behalf of the agency]

[Signature of person]

[Date]”

In addition, the related Cabinet paper seeking approval for the extended NIA needs to include a Quality of the Impact Analysis (for more information please refer to the section on the Format of International Treaty Action Papers in the Cabinet Office’s CabGuide and the Regulatory Impact Analysis Guidelines available from the Treasury website or the Regulatory Impact Analysis Team on ria@treasury.govt.nz)

IV ARRANGEMENTS

Governments and international organisations often choose to express arrangements negotiated with other governments or international organisations as understandings rather than legally binding obligations. Such instruments are arrangements of less than treaty status. They are intended by the participants to give rise to commitments of a political, rather than legal, nature. Arrangements are often concluded between government departments. However, the fact that an arrangement is concluded by a government department and not the "Government of New Zealand" does not change its status or importance as it still creates commitments for New Zealand.

Despite arrangements not being legally binding, the New Zealand government takes its commitments embodied in arrangements seriously. The negotiation and conclusion of arrangements should therefore be carefully considered. "Arrangement" is the most common name for such instruments. However, instruments are also commonly entitled joint communiqués, exchanges of notes or letters recording understandings and records of discussions.

Since arrangements are not intended to embody international legal obligations they are not agreements in the legal sense at all. To avoid disputes over the status of the instrument, the intention not to create legally binding rights and obligations needs to be borne out by the actual wording used in the instrument. The drafting of these documents therefore requires the same close scrutiny as the drafting of treaties. Legal obligations may otherwise creep in and give rise to the same order of dispute as a treaty.

As the words used are evidence of the intention of whether the countries involved are concluding legally binding obligations or not, special care must be taken to observe drafting conventions which distinguish arrangements from treaties. Thus, in arrangements of less than treaty status:

- There should be a reference to the fact that the arrangement embodies the understandings or arrangements of the participants.
- Avoid the words "agree", "agreement" and "agreed". Constructions such as "mutually arrange", "mutually decide", and "mutually consent" should be used instead.
- The mandatory "shall" used in treaties should be avoided, and "will" used instead.
- Arrangements should avoid formal preambles, although informally phrased opening recitals may be appropriate.
- Sub-divisions of the instrument should not be referred to as articles but rather as paragraphs.
- The arrangement should be expressed to "come into effect" rather than "enter into force".

Although these are the drafting rules that are generally adhered to by New Zealand and many other countries, they are not universally followed. Therefore, the status of the document should be clarified with the other participants during the negotiations. You need to discuss whether the countries/international organisations are intending to conclude an “agreement”, which of its own force imposes rights and obligations under international law (i.e. a treaty), or not (i.e. an arrangement of less than treaty status). As with treaties, it is imperative that the record of the negotiation for arrangements is clear about the intention of the participants.

In dealing with international arrangements it is important that the Legal Adviser for International Treaties, and any other relevant MFAT divisions, are consulted early in the process.

Arrangement vs. Memorandum of Understanding

We use the term “arrangement” rather than “memorandum of understanding” (MOU). For some years now, New Zealand has sought to avoid concluding MOUs. This is because MOUs have given rise to a good deal of confusion, with departments sometimes being misled into believing that the mere title of an intergovernmental instrument, regardless of what was said in substance, would determine whether or not it was to be regarded as of treaty status. MOUs can in some circumstances be treaties. Therefore, to avoid the potential confusion, any document not intended to be of treaty status should be referred to as an arrangement, not a MOU.

Express Provisions as to the Status

New Zealand’s practice is not to include express provisions as to the status of an international instrument in arrangements (for example, “this Arrangement is not intended to be legally binding”). Such provisions are unnecessary as the status of an international instrument should be clear from the form and language used in the text, and to include such provisions in some, but not all, arrangements could cause potential interpretation issues for New Zealand.

Terminology to be used in Arrangements

An arrangement should not be described, termed or referred to as an ‘Agreement’. The word ‘agree’ and its derivatives should be avoided (including in press statements and any emails, speeches or other communications). Instead, Governments are said ‘to enter into the following arrangements’ or to ‘have reached the following understanding’.

The terms of the arrangement should be cast as expressions of intent in order to avoid it being classed as an international treaty. Certain words should not be used. Some alternatives are suggested below:

DO NOT USE:	USE INSTEAD:
`article’	`paragraph’
`agreed’	`accepted’ `approved’ `decided’ or

	'consented'
'agreements' or 'undertakings'	'arrangements' or 'understandings'
'authoritative' or 'authentic'	'having equal validity'
'be entitled to'	'enjoy'
'bound to (or by)'	'covered by'
'clause'	'paragraph'
'commitments'	'arrangements'
'constitute an obligation'	'continue to apply to'
'continue in force'	'continue to have effect'
'crown'	'Governments' or 'Participants'
'disagreement' or 'dispute'	'difference'
'done'	'signed'
'enter into force'	'come into operation' 'come into effect'
'mutually agree'	'jointly decided'
'obligations'	'conditions' 'terms' or 'duties'
'Parties'	'Governments' 'Participants'
'rights'	'benefits'
'shall' 'must' 'undertake to' 'agree to' or 'undertake'	'will' or 'decide'
'undertake'	'carry out'
'undertakings' or 'agreements'	'understandings' or 'arrangements'

Approval to sign

We recommend that anyone approved by the Minister leading the policy action may sign an arrangement. The approval does not have to specify who signs, but if possible or likely to be an issue this should be approved by the relevant portfolio Minister.

It is often common for a Minister or Ambassador to sign an arrangement, although senior officials also do so. The rank of the officials signing the arrangement often depends on the nature of the arrangement.

It is also important that the two signatories are of equal or similar level within each system.

For further information please contact the Legal Adviser for International Treaties in the Legal Division of MFAT (treaties@mfat.govt.nz).

V TREATY CONSULTATION

MFAT Strategy for Engagement with Māori on International Treaties

Objectives

- To identify areas of developing international law of relevance to Māori interests and the Crown's Treaty of Waitangi relationship, and in particular, new international treaties which may make a potential impact on Māori.
- To ensure that issues of relevance to Māori in international treaties are identified early, and that engagement with Māori on a particular treaty is appropriately tailored according to the nature, extent and relative strength of the Māori interest.
- To ensure that engagement with Māori is effective and efficient in its use of government resources.

Nature of engagement

The onus is on the lead agency to identify at an early stage, on the basis of consultation with Te Puni Kōkiri if necessary, whether there is a need for engagement with Māori. The government department or agency that leads New Zealand's involvement in respect of a particular international treaty will be determined largely according to the subject matter of the treaty.

If it is considered that Māori involvement is required, the lead agency will be responsible for establishing the appropriate degree and nature of this involvement based on the nature, degree and strength of Māori interest. To ensure the most efficient use of resources, both for government and Māori, the appropriate form of engagement will need to be considered on a case by case basis for each international treaty where there is a Māori interest. Such engagement will range from raising awareness of the issues involved through the dissemination of information papers, right through to full consultation with Māori.

In developing the government's position on international treaties, other interested parties as well as Māori will need to continue to be engaged and have their interests considered. In some cases Māori concerns will be one of the most important factors in developing the government's position (for example international treaties dealing with the rights of indigenous peoples).

It is recognised that there will not be a need to involve Māori in discussions on all treaties but that the focus must be on ensuring that this occurs on international treaties concerning issues of relevance to Māori. In general terms, Māori involvement would be expected on any treaty action affecting the control or enjoyment of Māori resources (te tino rangatiratanga) or taonga as protected under the Treaty of Waitangi. However, government departments and agencies should be aware that the scope of what is of relevance to Māori is increasing. It should not be assumed that there is not Māori interest in a treaty solely on the basis that Māori have not been consulted on similar treaties in the past.

The following list provides an indication of the matters that are likely to be of interest to Māori in respect of these resources or taonga:

- Intellectual and cultural property
- Foreign investment
- Genetic resources
- Koiwi tangata and Mokomokai
- Employment
- Education
- Indigenous rights
- National language
- Human rights
- Immigration
- New Zealand flora and fauna
- Use of natural physical resources

Opportunities for engagement

Opportunities for Māori involvement in international treaties exist during all phases of treaty making. The following opportunities arise at each of the principal phases of the treaty-making process:

- on relevant issues in proposed new treaties and agreements currently under consideration - bilateral and multilateral;
- when preparing mandates for the negotiation of treaties in which Māori have interests;
- on developments of likely relevance to Māori before and during the negotiation of treaties relevant to Māori, including efforts to protect Māori interests;
- on any legislation necessary to enable New Zealand to give effect to obligations assumed under the treaty;
- on Cabinet Papers, including the paper proposing ratification or accession to the treaty (and any legislation needed to implement it);
- through the Parliamentary Treaty Examination Process including on the National Interest Analysis (NIA) which accompanies the treaty when it is tabled in the House pursuant to Standing Orders 397-400; and
- on any aspects of the implementation of an international treaty that impact on Māori.

Ongoing engagement

MFAT distributes to iwi and Māori organisations, a six monthly report on international treaties currently under negotiation or consideration as a means of ensuring that Māori are, wherever possible, kept informed of developments in the government's participation in the international legal framework.

In order to be able to furnish an accurate and complete report of treaties under negotiation, departments are required to inform MFAT of all negotiations in which they are involved. This is done through an online system, "New Zealand Treaties Online", that departments are required to update regularly.

Engagement with Māori on particular treaties will enable the development of an ongoing relationship with Māori on matters of interest to them. It should extend beyond initial consideration of international treaties by the government to the implementation of such treaties.

Summary of key elements of the strategy

- Lead agency to identify whether proposed treaty is of interest or relevance to Māori, in consultation with Te Puni Kōkiri if necessary.
- Where Māori involvement is considered appropriate, lead agency to draw attention to matters of likely significance for Māori and to establish the appropriate nature, extent and timing of engagement with Māori.
- Lead agency to ensure the appropriate engagement with Māori occurs.
- Agencies to update New Zealand Treaties Online on a regular basis.

Consultation with Tokelau, the Cook Islands and Niue

New Zealand has special constitutional links with three countries in the South Pacific: Tokelau, the Cook Islands and Niue. Questions arise from time to time as to the application of treaties to those countries.

Tokelau is a dependent territory of New Zealand, a non-self-governing territory for the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations, and "part of New Zealand" under the Tokelau Act 1948. While substantially self-governing in practice, it does not have its own international legal personality. Any treaty making in respect of Tokelau is done by the New Zealand Government, on the basis of consultation with the Government of Tokelau. An express statement will typically be made as to whether or not the treaty action in question applies to Tokelau.

Much progress has been made in recent years towards an act of self-determination in Tokelau and a move to self-government in free association with New Zealand. Two referenda on this issue have been conducted in Tokelau in February 2006 and October 2007; however, both failed to produce the necessary majority for a change in status, so for the time being, Tokelau remains a dependent territory of New Zealand.

All departments leading treaty actions will need to consult the Legal Division of MFAT at an early stage to determine the nature and scope of consultation with Tokelau.

The Cook Islands and Niue are self-governing states in free association with New Zealand. They obtained that status as a result of acts of self-determination under United Nations auspices, in 1965 and 1974 respectively. While not fully independent, the Cook Islands and Niue are recognised as "states" at international law. Since the mid-1980s they have generally conducted their own treaty making. In 1988 the New Zealand Government declared to the Secretary-General of the United Nations that from that point onwards, New Zealand treaty actions would not extend to the Cook Islands or Niue unless expressly done on their behalf. New Zealand treaties that were extended to the Cook Islands and Niue prior to 1988 (and, in a few cases, since 1988) continue to apply to the Cook Islands and Niue.

Questions concerning treaty application often require consultation with the Governments of Tokelau, the Cook Islands and Niue. Departments considering treaty actions which may have implications for Tokelau, the Cook Islands or Niue should contact the Legal Division of MFAT.

VI INFORMATION SOURCES FOR INTERNATIONAL TREATIES

New Zealand Treaties Online; www.treaties.mfat.govt.nz

New Zealand Treaties Online (NZTO) is a publically accessible website providing an up-to-date public record of New Zealand's binding legal obligations. The site details all of the treaties New Zealand is a party to, providing either a copy of the treaty or a link to the text, a summary of the treaty and other relevant information, such as when it entered into force for New Zealand.

NZTO also maintains a 'Treaties in Progress' section, which has replaced the biannual International Treaties List. 'Treaties in Progress' contains information on all the treaties New Zealand is in the process of negotiating, concluding, ratifying or amending. The lead government agency for a treaty is responsible for keeping 'Treaties in Progress' up to date. This information is used as the basis for the six monthly reports that is distributed to iwi and Māori organisations on Treaties in Progress. MFAT will be in touch with lead contacts every six months to ensure entries are up to date.

MFAT website

The MFAT website (www.mfat.govt.nz) provides basic information on the treaty-making process.

Other relevant websites

New Zealand

Select Committee Reports (including recently tabled NIAs):

<http://www.parliament.nz/en-NZ/PB/SC/>

Cabinet Office:

www.dPMC.govt.nz

United Nations

United Nations Treaty Handbook:

<http://treaties.un.org/doc/source/publications/THB/English.pdf>

United Nations Treaty Series:

<http://treaties.un.org/Home.aspx>

Other Commonwealth jurisdictions

Australian Treaty Library:

www.austlii.edu.au

UK Foreign and Commonwealth Office Treaty Section:

<http://www.fco.gov.uk/en/publications-and-documents/treaties/>

Canadian Treaty Section (Foreign Affairs Canada):

www.treaty-accord.gc.ca

International Treaty Law

Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties:

untreaty.un.org/ilc/texts/instruments/english/conventions/1_1_1969.pdf

Please contact the Legal Adviser for International Treaties in the Legal Division of the MFAT for further information (treaties@mfat.govt.nz).

United Nations - Office of Legal Affairs
Treaty Section

VII GLOSSARY

This section provides a guide to terms commonly used in relation to treaties and employed in the practice of the United Nations Secretary-General as depositary of multilateral treaties, as well as in the Secretariat's registration function. Where applicable, a reference to relevant provisions of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 1969 is included.

Acceptance

See ratification.

Accession

Accession is the act whereby a State that has not signed a treaty expresses its consent to become a party to that treaty by depositing an "instrument of accession". Accession has the same legal effect as ratification, acceptance or approval. The conditions under which accession may occur and the procedure involved depend on the provisions of the relevant treaty. Accession is generally employed by States wishing to express their consent to be bound by a treaty where the deadline for signature has passed. However, many modern multilateral treaties provide for accession even during the period that the treaty is open for signature. See articles 2(b) and 15 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Adoption

Adoption is the formal act by which negotiating parties establish the form and content of a treaty. The treaty is adopted through a specific act expressing the will of the States and the international organisations participating in the negotiation of that treaty, e.g., by voting on the text, initialling, signing, etc. Adoption may also be the mechanism used to establish the form and content of amendments to a treaty, or regulations under a treaty. Treaties that are negotiated within an international organisation are usually adopted by resolution of the representative organ of that organisation. For example, treaties negotiated under the auspices of the United Nations, or any of its bodies, are adopted by a resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations. Where an international conference is specifically convened for the purpose of adopting a treaty, the treaty can be adopted by a vote of two thirds of the States present and voting, unless they have decided by the same majority to apply a different rule. See article 9 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Amendment

Amendment, in the context of treaty law, means the formal alteration of the provisions of a treaty by its parties. Such alterations must be effected with the same formalities that attended the original formation of the treaty. Multilateral treaties typically provide specifically for their amendment. In the absence of such provisions, the adoption and entry into force of amendments require the consent of all the parties. See articles 39 and 40 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Approval

See ratification.

Consent to be Bound

A State expresses its consent to be bound by a treaty under international law by some formal act, i.e., definitive signature, ratification, acceptance, approval or accession. The treaty normally specifies the act or acts by which a state may express its consent to be bound. See articles 11-18 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Contracting State

A contracting State is a state that has expressed its consent to be bound by a treaty where the treaty has not yet entered into force or where it has not entered into force for that state. See article 2(1)(f) of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Credentials

Credentials take the form of a document issued by a state authorising a delegate or delegation of that state to attend a conference, including, where necessary, for the purpose of negotiating and adopting the text of a treaty. A state may also issue credentials to enable signature of the Final Act of a conference. Credentials are distinct from full powers. Credentials permit a delegate or delegation to adopt the text of a treaty and/or sign the Final Act, while full powers permit a person to undertake any given treaty action (in particular, signature of treaties).

Declaration

interpretative declaration

An interpretative declaration is a declaration by a state as to its understanding of some matter covered by a treaty or its interpretation of a particular provision. Unlike reservations, declarations merely clarify a state's position and do not purport to exclude or modify the legal effect of a treaty. The Secretary-General, as depositary, pays specific attention to declarations to ensure that they do not amount to reservations. Usually, declarations are made at the time of signature or at the time of deposit of an instrument of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession. Political declarations usually do not fall into this category as they contain only political sentiments and do not seek to express a view on legal rights and obligations under a treaty.

mandatory declaration

A mandatory declaration is a declaration specifically required by the treaty itself. Unlike an interpretative declaration, a mandatory declaration is binding on the State making it.

optional declaration

An optional declaration is a declaration that a treaty specifically provides for, but does not require. Unlike an interpretative declaration, an optional declaration is binding on the state making it.

Depositary

The depositary of a treaty is the custodian of the treaty and is entrusted with the functions specified in article 77 of the Vienna Convention 1969. The depositary accepts notifications and documents related to treaties deposited with them, examines whether all formal requirements are met, deposits them, registers them subject to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations and notifies all relevant acts to the parties concerned. A depositary can be one or more states, an international organisation, or the chief administrative officer of the organisation, such as the Secretary-General of the United Nations. See articles 76 and 77 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Entry into Force

definitive entry into force

Entry into force of a treaty is the moment in time when a treaty becomes legally binding on the parties to the treaty. The provisions of the treaty determine the moment of its entry into force. This may be a date specified in the treaty or a date on which a specified number of ratifications, approvals, acceptances or accessions have been deposited with the depositary.

provisional entry into force

Provisional entry into force may be allowed by the terms of a treaty, for example, in commodity agreements. Provisional entry into force of a treaty may also occur when a number of parties to a treaty that has not yet entered into force decide to apply the treaty as if it had entered into force. Once a treaty has entered into force provisionally, it creates obligations for the parties that agreed to bring it into force in that manner. See article 25(1) of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Exchange of Letters or Notes

An exchange of letters or notes may embody a bilateral treaty commitment. The basic characteristic of this procedure is that the signatures of both parties appear not on one letter or note but on two separate letters or notes. The agreement therefore lies in the exchange of these letters or notes, each of the parties retaining one letter or note signed by the representative of the other party. In practice, the second letter or note (usually the letter or note in response) will reproduce the text of the first. In a bilateral treaty, the parties may also exchange letters or notes to indicate that they have completed all domestic procedures necessary to implement the treaty. See article 13 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Final Act

A Final Act is a document summarising the proceedings of a diplomatic conference. It is normally the formal act by which the negotiating parties bring the conference to a conclusion. It is usually part of the documentation arising from the conference, including the treaty, the resolutions and interpretative declarations made by participating states. There is no obligation to sign the Final Act, but signature may permit participation in subsequent mechanisms arising from the conference, such as preparatory committees. Signing the Final Act does not normally create legal obligations or bind the signatory state to sign or ratify the treaty attached to it.

Full Powers

instrument of full powers

Full powers take the form of a solemn instrument issued by the Head of State, Head of Government or Minister for Foreign Affairs, empowering a named representative to undertake given treaty actions. The Head of State, Head of Government and Minister for Foreign Affairs are considered as representing their State for the purpose of all acts relating to the signature of, and the consent to be bound by, a treaty. Accordingly, they need not present full powers for those purposes. See articles 2(1)(c) and 7 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

instrument of general full powers

An instrument of general full powers authorises a named representative to execute certain treaty actions, such as signatures, relating to treaties of a certain kind (for example, all treaties adopted under the auspices of a particular organisation).

Party

A party to a treaty is a state or other entity with treaty-making capacity that has expressed its consent to be bound by that treaty by an act of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession, etc., where that treaty has entered into force for that particular State. This means that the state is bound by the treaty under international law. See article 2(1)(g) of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Plenipotentiary

A plenipotentiary, in the context of full powers, is the person authorised by an instrument of full powers to undertake a specific treaty action.

Protocol

A protocol, in the context of treaty law and practice, has the same legal characteristics as a treaty. The term protocol is often used to describe agreements of a less formal nature than those entitled treaty or convention. Generally, a protocol amends, supplements or clarifies a multilateral treaty. A protocol is normally open to participation by the parties to the parent agreement. However, in recent times states have negotiated a number of protocols that do not follow this principle. The advantage of a protocol is that, while it is linked to the parent agreement, it can focus on a specific aspect of that agreement in greater detail.

Provisional Application

provisional application of a treaty that has entered into force

Provisional application of a treaty that has entered into force may occur when a state unilaterally undertakes to give legal effect to the obligations under a treaty on a provisional and voluntary basis. The state would generally intend to ratify, accept, approve or accede to the treaty once its domestic procedural requirements for international ratification have been satisfied. The state may terminate this provisional application at any time. In contrast, a state that has consented to be bound by a treaty through ratification, acceptance, approval, accession or definitive signature generally can only withdraw its consent in accordance with the provisions of the treaty or, in the absence of such provisions, other rules of treaty law. See article 24 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

provisional application of a treaty that has not entered into force

Provisional application of a treaty that has not entered into force may occur when a state notifies the signatory states to a treaty that has not yet entered into force that it will give effect to the legal obligations specified in that treaty on a provisional and unilateral basis. Since this is a unilateral act by the state, subject to its domestic legal framework, it may terminate this provisional application at any time. A state may continue to apply a treaty provisionally, even after the treaty has entered into force, until the state has ratified, approved, accepted or acceded to the treaty. A state's provisional application terminates if that state notifies the other states among which the treaty is being applied provisionally of its intention not to become a party to the treaty. See article 25 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Ratification, Acceptance, Approval

Ratification, acceptance and approval all refer to the act undertaken on the international plane, whereby a state establishes its consent to be bound by a treaty. Ratification, acceptance and approval all require two steps:

- i. The execution of an instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval by the Head of State, Head of Government or Minister for Foreign Affairs, expressing the intent of the State to be bound by the relevant treaty; and
- ii. For multilateral treaties, the deposit of the instrument with the depositary; and for bilateral treaties, the exchange of the instruments between parties.

The instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval must comply with certain international legal requirements. Ratification, acceptance or approval at the international level indicates to the international community a state's commitment to undertake the obligations under a treaty. This should not be confused with the process at the national level, which a state may be required to undertake in accordance with its own constitutional provisions, before it consents to be bound internationally. Ratification at the national level is inadequate to establish the state's consent to be bound at the international level. See articles 2(1)(b), 11, 14 and 16 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Registration

Registration, in the context of treaty law and practice, refers to the function of the Secretariat of the United Nations in effecting the registration of treaties and international agreements under Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

Reservation

A reservation is a statement made by a state by which it purports to exclude or alter the legal effect of certain provisions of a treaty in their application to that state. A reservation may enable a state to participate in a multilateral treaty that it would otherwise be unable or unwilling to participate in. States can make reservations to a treaty when they sign, ratify, accept, approve or accede to it. When a state makes a reservation upon signing, it must confirm the reservation upon ratification, acceptance or approval. Since a reservation purports to modify the legal obligations of a state, it must be signed by the Head of State, Head of Government or Minister for Foreign Affairs. Reservations cannot be contrary to the object and purpose of the treaty. Some treaties prohibit reservations or only permit specified reservations. See articles 2(1)(d) and 19-23 of the Vienna Convention 1969.Signature definitive signature (signature not subject to ratification)

Definitive signature occurs where a state expresses its consent to be bound by a treaty by signing the treaty without the need for ratification, acceptance or approval. A state may definitively sign a treaty only when the treaty so permits. A number of treaties deposited with the Secretary-General permit definitive signature. See article 12 of the Vienna Convention 1969 simple signature (signature subject to ratification)

Simple signature applies to most multilateral treaties. This means that when a state signs the treaty, the signature is subject to ratification, acceptance or approval. The state has not expressed its consent to be bound by the treaty until it ratifies, accepts or approves it. In that case, a state that signs a treaty is obliged to refrain, in good faith, from acts that would defeat the object and purpose of the treaty. Signature alone does not impose on the state obligations under the treaty. See articles 14 and 18 of the Vienna Convention 1969.

Treaty

Treaty is a generic term embracing all instruments binding under international law, regardless of their formal designation, concluded between two or more international juridical persons. Thus, treaties may be concluded between: states; international organisations with treaty-making capacity and states; or international organisations with treaty-making capacity. The application of the term treaty, in the generic sense, signifies that the parties intend to create rights and obligations enforceable under international law. The Vienna Convention 1969 defines a treaty as "an international agreement concluded between states in written form and governed by international law, whether embodied in a single instrument or in two or more related instruments and whatever its particular designation" (article 2(1)(a)). Accordingly, conventions, agreements, protocols, and exchange of letters or notes may all constitute treaties. A treaty must be governed by international law and is normally in written form. Although the Vienna Convention 1969 does not apply to non-written agreements, its definition of a treaty states that the absence of writing does not affect the legal force of international agreements. No international rules exist as to when an international instrument should be entitled a treaty. However, usually the term treaty is employed for instruments of some gravity and solemnity. See article 2(1)(a) of the Vienna Convention 1969. See generally Vienna Convention 1969 and Vienna Convention 1986.

bilateral treaty

A bilateral treaty is a treaty between two parties.

multilateral treaty

A multilateral treaty is a treaty between more than two parties.

VIII ANNEXES

Annex A: Timeline for concluding and implementing a treaty

Concluding and implementing a treaty can be a lengthy process. The table below provides a guide for the steps that may be necessary when concluding and implementing a treaty. To ensure that the relevant timelines are met, it is recommended that this table be used as a template that is filled out by the lead agency in the early stage of considering a new treaty action. The lead agency should consult with the Legal Adviser for International Treaties at an early stage to discuss the relevant steps for any particular treaty action.

Note: that some steps may be combined for individual treaties e.g. go to Cabinet once for approval to sign, present the NIA and enter into force.

1. Signature and Entry into Force (Bilateral) or Ratification (Multilateral)

Action	Actor	Date
Seek mandate to negotiate (usually required from Cabinet)	Lead Agency in consultation with MFAT
Conduct any appropriate consultation e.g. with Māori	Lead agency (perhaps with Te Puni Kōkiri)
Text of the treaty finalised	Negotiating Parties
If bilateral, consult with MFAT about whether a NIA is required If not required, seek parliamentary treaty examination waiver from Minister of Foreign Affairs	Lead Agency MFAT (Legal Division)
Complete Cabinet Paper requesting approval to sign and bring the treaty into force (bilateral) or ratify the treaty (multilateral)	Lead Agency in consultation with MFAT
Officials draft National Interest Analysis (NIA)	Lead Agency in consultation with MFAT
Consultation period begins	Lead Agency
Consultation period complete	Lead Agency
Cabinet Paper and NIA to Minister for referral to Cabinet	Lead Agency in consultation with MFAT

Cabinet Paper and NIA to Cabinet Office	Minister's Office (Lead Agency)
Cabinet Paper and NIA to External Relations and Defence Cabinet Committee (ERD) (or appropriate committee?)	Cabinet Office
Cabinet Paper and NIA to Cabinet for approval to sign and bring the treaty into force/ratify	Cabinet Office
Minister of Foreign Affairs signs Instrument of Full Powers	MFAT (Legal Division)
New Zealand signs the treaty	Lead Agency in consultation with MFAT

If a NIA is not required skip to stage 3 below.

2. Parliamentary process

Action	Actor	Date
Drafting Instructions submitted to PCO (if required)	Lead Agency
NIA and treaty text presented in the House	MFAT (Legal Division)
NIA to Foreign Affairs, Defence and Trade Committee (FADTC)	FADTC Select Committee
NIA referred to subject Select Committee (if appropriate)	Subject Select Committee
Select Committee consideration (can involve officials appearing before committee, submissions etc)	Lead Agency, with support from MFAT if required
Select Committee Report presented	Select Committee
Introduction of legislation to the House (if required)	Lead Agency
Primary legislative process complete	Lead Agency
Regulations and LEG Cabinet Paper to Ministers	Lead Agency
Regulations to Cabinet Office	Ministers' Office
Regulations to LEG Committee	Cabinet Office

Action	Actor	Date
Regulations to Cabinet and Exec Council	Cabinet Office

3. Final Stages:

Action	Actor	Date
Preparation of Instrument of Ratification or other document for treaty to enter into force (can require signature from Minister of Foreign Affairs)	MFAT (Legal Division)
Instrument of Ratification or other document for treaty to enter into force (e.g. third person note) despatched to overseas post	MFAT (Legal Division)
Instrument of Ratification deposited/ other document for treaty to enter into force sent	MFAT (Legal Division)
NZ is a party	Depositary/other party confirmation
Publicity	Lead Agency

Annex B: Cabinet Manual 2017 excerpts

Available online at: <https://www.dPMC.govt.nz/our-business-units/cabinet-office/supporting-work-cabinet/cabinet-manual>

International treaties and Cabinet

5.77 A treaty is a written agreement between states or international organisations that is governed by international law. Treaties (whatever their particular title) create international legal obligations for the states that have expressed their consent to be bound.

5.78 The steps required to become bound depend on the terms of a given treaty. Sometimes there are two steps: signature, followed by binding treaty action (often called ratification). Sometimes there is only the binding treaty action (for example, accession or definitive signature). Other examples of binding treaty action include changing an existing reservation to a treaty, and termination of or withdrawal from a treaty. An amendment to a treaty may also involve a new treaty (and therefore a binding treaty action).

5.79 Any proposal for New Zealand to sign a treaty or to take binding treaty action must be submitted, with the text of the treaty, to Cabinet for approval. Domestic implementation (including any legislation and consultation) must be completed before binding treaty action is taken. For detailed guidance, see the CabGuide.

5.80 Where the Standing Orders require a treaty to be presented to the House for examination before binding treaty action is taken, a national interest analysis must also be prepared and submitted to Cabinet. Guidance on the parliamentary treaty examination process is provided in paragraphs 7.123 – 7.133.

5.81 The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade can provide advice on all aspects of the treaty-making process, and on the making of non-binding international instruments (usually called arrangements). Departments should consult the ministry's legal division at an early stage if they are considering entering into any negotiations that may result in a treaty or arrangement.

Parliamentary Treaty Examination

General

7.123 In New Zealand, the power to conclude treaties rests with the Executive. Any proposal to sign a treaty or to take binding treaty action must be submitted to Cabinet for approval (see paragraphs 5.77 – 5.81).

7.124 Before the government takes binding treaty action on them, multilateral treaties and major bilateral treaties of particular significance are presented to the House of Representatives for examination. The requirements for parliamentary treaty examination are set out in the Standing Orders. The Minister of Foreign Affairs determines whether a bilateral treaty amounts to a major bilateral treaty of particular significance.

7.125 The parliamentary treaty examination process takes time, which departments must factor into their planning. The government may take binding treaty action before parliamentary treaty examination only where this is urgently necessary in the national interest.

National interest analysis

7.126 Presenting a treaty to the House requires the preparation of a national interest analysis, addressing such matters as the reasons for becoming a party to the treaty, the advantages and disadvantages to New Zealand, and the means of implementing the treaty.

7.127 The department with the main policy interest in the treaty, in consultation with the legal division of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade, is responsible for preparing the national interest analysis according to the requirements of the Standing Orders. In cases where a treaty has regulatory impacts, an extended national interest analysis, which includes the elements of an impact statement for a regulatory proposal, must be prepared. The national interest analysis must be approved by Cabinet before it is presented to the House.

Select committee consideration

7.128 Once a treaty and accompanying national interest analysis have been presented to the House, they are referred to the Foreign Affairs, Defence and Trade Committee. This select committee may examine the treaty itself, or refer it to another more appropriate select committee.

7.129 The government refrains from taking any binding treaty action in respect of a treaty that has been presented to the House until the relevant select committee has reported, or 15 sitting days have elapsed from the date of presentation, whichever is sooner. The select committee may indicate to the government that it needs more time to consider the treaty, in which case the government may consider deferring binding treaty action.

7.130 The select committee may seek public submissions. In addition, the House itself may sometimes wish to give further consideration to the treaty: for example, by way of a debate in the House.

7.131 If the select committee report contains recommendations to the government, a government response to those recommendations must be presented within 60 working days of the report (or such other timeframe be specified in the Standing Orders). For further information, see paragraphs 7.119 – 7.122, and the section entitled “Reports” in the chapter on select committees in the Standing Orders.

Related legislation

7.132 Any legislation necessary to implement a treaty domestically should not be introduced into the House until after the treaty has been presented and the time for the select committee to report has expired. Departments may initiate the legislative process earlier, by seeking a place on the legislation programme for the bill and issuing drafting instructions to parliamentary counsel (on a conditional basis).

Further Information

7.133 The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade can provide advice on the parliamentary treaty examination process, including guidance on the required format and content of a national interest analysis. Further information is set out in the CabGuide.

Annex C: Standing Orders 397-400 of the House of Representatives

397 Presentation and referral of treaties

- (1) The Government will present the following international treaties to the House:
 - (a) any treaty that is to be subject to ratification, accession, acceptance, or approval by New Zealand:
 - (b) any treaty that has been subject to ratification, accession, acceptance, or approval on an urgent basis in the national interest:
 - (c) any treaty that has been subject to ratification, accession, acceptance, or approval and that is to be subject to withdrawal or denunciation by New Zealand:
 - (d) any major bilateral treaty of particular significance, not otherwise covered by subparagraph (a), that the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade decides to present to the House.
- (2) A national interest analysis for the treaty, which addresses all the matters set out in Standing Order 398, will be presented at the same time as the treaty.
- (3) Both the treaty and the national interest analysis stand referred to the Foreign Affairs, Defence and Trade Committee.

398 National interest analysis

- (1) A national interest analysis must address the following matters:
 - (a) the reasons for New Zealand becoming party to the treaty:
 - (b) the advantages and disadvantages to New Zealand of the treaty entering into force for New Zealand:
 - (c) the obligations which would be imposed on New Zealand by the treaty, and the position in respect of reservations to the treaty:
 - (d) the economic, social, cultural, and environmental effects of the treaty entering into force for New Zealand, and of the treaty not entering into force for New Zealand:
 - (e) the costs to New Zealand of compliance with the treaty:
 - (f) the possibility of any subsequent protocols (or other amendments) to the treaty, and of their likely effects:
 - (g) the measures which could or should be adopted to implement the treaty, and the intentions of the Government in relation to such measures, including legislation:
 - (h) a statement setting out the consultations which have been undertaken or are proposed with the community and interested parties in respect of the treaty:
 - (i) whether the treaty provides for withdrawal or denunciation.
- (2) In relation to paragraph (1)(g), a national interest analysis must indicate whether or not the Government intends for the treaty to be implemented through a bill.
- (3) In the case of a treaty that has been subject to ratification, accession, acceptance, or approval on an urgent basis in the national interest, the national interest analysis must also explain the reasons for the urgent action taken.

(4) In the case of a treaty that has been subject to ratification, accession, acceptance, or approval and that is to be subject to withdrawal or denunciation by New Zealand, the national interest analysis must address the matters set out in paragraph (1) to the full extent applicable to that proposed action.

399 Select committee consideration of treaties

(1) The Foreign Affairs, Defence and Trade Committee considers the subject area of the treaty and,—

- (a) if that subject area is primarily within the committee's own terms of reference, retains the treaty for examination, or
- (b) if that subject area is primarily within the terms of reference of another select committee, refers the treaty to that committee for examination.

(2) If the Foreign Affairs, Defence and Trade Committee is not due to meet within seven days of the presentation of a treaty, and the subject area of the treaty is clearly within the terms of reference of another select committee, the chairperson may refer the treaty to that committee for examination.

400 Reports by select committees on treaties

(1) A select committee must report to the House on any treaty that has been referred to it.

(2) In examining a treaty and the accompanying national interest analysis, the committee considers whether the treaty ought to be drawn to the attention of the House—

- (a) on any of the grounds covered by the national interest analysis, or
- (b) for any other reason.

(3) The committee must include the national interest analysis as an appendix to its report.

(4) If the Government intends for the treaty to be implemented through a bill, the committee must draw this to the House's attention.

